

BEING ACTIVE WITH CANCER

Regular movement and physical activity are a key part of optimising health and wellbeing during treatment for cancer.

Patients commonly report the following benefits from being physically active:

- Reduces anxiety, low mood and depression
- Alleviates lymphoedema
- Improves cancer-related fatigue
- Improves sleep quality
- Helps restore wellbeing and quality of life
- Reduces hospital stay and improves recovery
- Reduces post-operative complications and side effects from anti-cancer treatment.

There is lots of evidence detailing the benefits of regular movement and activity to people living with a cancer diagnosis, the Moving Medicine website has gathered all of it together for both healthcare professionals and patients to utilise.
